AND STILL A MYSTERY. How a Well-Known Young Citizen Lost His Horse ?—Jesse Cody's Strange Story.

From the New York Dispatch.

Great was the excitement prevailing in this city on the evening of March 21 and morning of March 22, 1843. A horrible crime had been committed—openly, in the midst of the community, in a bustling, busy locality—and yet in a manner to defy detection. A well-known citizen had been shot dead in the open street, and yet no one could identify or give such description of the murderer as would lead to his arrest. Charles G. Coris, the victim of this tragedy, was a native of Osage county, Vt., and at the time of its occurrence was aged twenty-eight years and eight months. He resided at a boarding house at 108 Leonard street, his place of business being 360 Broadway, where he kept a bowling saloon, by Horse !- Jesse Cody's Strange Story.

which was said to be much frequented by ladies.
Shortly before this Corlis had become acquestried with a married lady. Mrs. Colton, whose husband, Mr. J. H. Colton, had been the superintendent or proprietor of a fashionable club house, at 24 Vessey street, by which he had amassed a considerable sum of money, and which he had but recently disposed of. Both Mr. and Mrs. Colton were natives of Providence, R. I. They had been married many years, and had two children, the eldest of whom was at this time 12 years of age. Mrs. Colton could not be described as a handsome woman, though her manners were agreeable and her features pleasing. Mr. Colton was a man of much more refined manners than is usually found with people of his profession. Strictly temperate in habits, faithful to his engagements, and warmly attached to his family, he enjoyed an amount of respect and esteem somewhat inconsistent with his means of living.

THE FATAL DISCOVERY.

THE PATAL DISCOVERY.

THE PATAL DISCOVERY.

The discovery that Corlis was corresponding with his wife pained him very much. Nothing but the kindly intervention of a friend, understood to have been Mr. Samuel S. Suydam, prevented Mrs. Colton from robbing her husband of $2,000 and eloping with Corlis. Colton for the sake of his children, endeavored to have the matter kept quiet, but forced Corlis, in the presence of a friend, to pledge himself to refrain from any further correspondence with his wife. This obligation, however, Corlis failed to keep, and Colton became so enraged on finding him once more prowling about the promises, evidently on the outlook for an interview with Mrs. Colton, that on the evening of March 10 he went forth armed, and encountering Corlis near to his own house, attempted to shoot him. The pistoi snapped, and the watchman arriving opportunely, Colton was arrested, and the following morning held to bail in the sum of $2,000. Corlis, feeling in great danger of his life, induced the magistrate to increase the bail to $5,000, and another surety to a similar amount was imposed, pending a civil suit for damages.

THE MYSTERIOUS WOMAN.

another surety to a similar amount was imposed, pending a civil suit for damages.

THE MYSTERIOUS WOMAN.

Having put our readers in possession of the necessary preliminary facts, we will now proceed with a narration of the actual murder. On the evening of March 21, about 5% o'clock, Mr. Corlis and his assistant, Mr. Robinson, were seated in the saloon at 360 Broadway, engaged in reading a leiter, when their attention was attracted by a slight tap at the door. On opening it, a female, attired in a dark cloak and straw hat, and closely veiled, presented herself. Corlis did not at first speak to her, but motioned in a rather disrespectful manner for her to go away. She insisted on entering, and seated herself on the sofa beside Corlis, he and she soon getting engaged in an apparently exciting but perfectly noiseless conversation. Presently there entered several gentiemen, among them Mr. John K. Hackett, a son of the distinguished actor. Mr. Hackett addressed Corlis, but the latter seemed to pay no attention to him, and immediately after put, on his overcoat and prepared to go. Robinson touched him on the shoulder, and whispering, said: "Is that Mrs. Colton?" but Corlis did not reply to him either.

He was seen immediately after engaged in conversation with this female, but as near as could be ascertained, about ten minutes to seven o'clock the report of a pistol was heard almost opposite the Carlton House, in Leonard street, and on proceeding to the spot, the body of Corlis was found, face downward, on the ledge of the pavement, a ball penetrating the rear part of the head, near the base of the skull, in an upward direction, the shot being lodged in the brain. He was conveyed into the Carlton House, but never spoke a word, and after lingering in horrible agony for upward of three hours, died shortly after ten o'clock.

The police were at once notified, and Chief Matsell, accompanied by several officers, at once

The police were at once notified, and Chief Matsell, accompanied by several officers, at once repaired to the Carlton House, and thence to the odging of Colton, on whom suspicion at once rested, from the fact of his having already attempted Corlis's life. Colton was by this time separated from his wife, she residing in the house of a Mr. John Wallace, and he, with his hidren, in Mr. Parsons's, next door. Chief Matsell knocked at the door, and was answered by Colton himself. Mr. Parsons was present with Colton, but at the request of the latter, withdrew, when Chief Matsell, slapping Colton on the shoulder, exclaimed, "You are my prisoner: That man is murdered!" Colton not appearing to understand him, he pected that you or a woman has done it."

The connection of a woman with the shooting will presently be shown. Colton was for a time lost in thought. Placing his finger to his forehead he said: "The black boy told me that my wife went out this afternoon; but it couldn't be she, either, as I have thought that she loved him."

Pausing a moment, he then suddenly re-parked: "Chief Matsell, how you did make my MRS. COLTON FEIGNING INSANITY.

MRS. COLTON FRIGNING INSANITY.

The house was searched, but there was nothing to indicate Colton's connection with the crime. His boote exhibited no marks of his having been out lately. He himself denied all participation in the murder, and Parsons asserted that he had not left the house since half past 6. At this point a woman entered 'he house whose costume was not at all unlike that of the mysterious femsle who had called upon Corlis. She passed hastily up stairs and into Mr. Parsons shousekeeper's room on the second story. On being questioned, she said she had just come from Greene street down Broadway, and had "run like a race horse." She was not arrested. Two pistol bullet moulds were found in the house, but they were not of a size to suit the weapon with which Corlis was shot. Colton was conveyed to the city prison, and the officials proceeded next door to the residence of his wife. She refused to see or admit any one, and the Coroner found it necessary to have the door burst in, when on entering they found Mrs. Colton lying on the sofa attired in a white dress with a black cape, her head reclining on the pillow. She feigned insanity, but when a stomach pump was threatened, it being feared she had taken poison, she speedily recovered. By advice of her counsel, Mr. Charles O'Conor, she consented to go to the Tombs with them late that evening.

JESSE CODY'S STRANGE STORY. Cariton House, and endeavor to dissect the neighborhood at the immediate time of the murder. Jesse Cody, who was seated in the barroom of the Cariton House, rushed out on hearing the shot, and just caught a glimpse of something which he at first thought a woman, but subsequently could not define to be "a man, a woman, or a horse," turning the corner. Henry Hodges sew Corlis in conversation with the woman just previous to the shot, and was the first to come to the assistance of the dying man. Bates, who accompanied Hodges, said a woman hurried past them as they rushed out from the hotel. J. P. Clement passed down Leonard street on the north side a few minutes before seven, and saw Corlis with a female who, he alleged, did not resemble Mrs. Colton in the slightest. Numerous witnesses testified to secting a woman hurrying away just after the shooting, and most of their descriptions agreed with that given of the lady who had left the bowling saloon with Corlis. This same female, or one similarly attired, had called at the boardinghouse in the afternoon, but he was not in. A Leghorn hat and green veil found in Mrs. Colton's room was identified by nearly all the witnesses as that worn by the mysterious woman.

WHO WAE THE WOMAN?

WHO WAS THE WOMAN?

The accounts of her size were also very conflicting. While one described her as under the ordinary height, though stout, another alleged that the female in question was a tail, slim woman. Some witnesses testified to meeting her coming down Leonard street, and others to seeing her go up; and eventually the whole collection of evidence became a mass of co., radictions. Mr. G. W. Dixon volunteered a statement to the effect that three months previously a girl named Mary Stewart had called upon him and threatened Corlie's life for a real or fancied injury. Rebecca Hays, on hearing of Colton's attempt to shoot Corlis, and the reason of it, was heard to exclaim, "Curse him! I hope to God Colton will shoot him!" A witness testified that the woman he had seen with Corlis on the evening of the murder resembled this Rebecca Hays much more than she did Mrs. Colton.

THE VERDICT. WHO WAS THE WOMAN?

The investigation before the Coroner and jury extended over more than a week, and resulted in the following verdict:

some person or persons to the furors unknown.

Many entertained the idea that the whole affair was a deeply laid plan of Colton's. It was supposed that Mis. Colton had gone to tell Corlis of her husband's separation from her; that on emerging from the bowling saloon she had left Corlis and gone home, as no woman had been seen walking with him along Broadway or Leonard street; and that another woman, similarly attired and got up as a decoy duck, had accosted Corlis in front of the Cariton House and given a third party an opportunity of firing at him from some private entrance. It was endeavored to prove that this decoy was the girl Hays; but the effort was a failure. In fact, throughout this remarkable case each witness may be said to have differed from all the others. Certain it is that to this day the Corlis mystery it is that to this day the Corlis mystery

He dreamed that he arose, packed his value, walked to Indianapolis and took the eastern bound cars. His surprise on awakening and finding himself seventy-five inites from home can better be imagined than described. The Indianapolis Sentinel, which re-lates this singular case of somnambulism, says: "How he puchased his ticket without his state being detected by the agent, and how he slumbered serenely through all the din and noise of the Union Depot, are among

One pupil would assume a fictitious char-acter, called Mother Barlow, and she would be pitted against another, who would be called Mother Cummins, in a contest of verbal abuse, the teacher encour-aging and prompting first one and then the other as the exigencies of the case might require. Such tuition was considered useful to the girls, not only to enable them to "derend their station" in the streets, but also as tending to qualify them for the position of wives and

What Dr. Greeley Calls "Crembs of ComFront."

There has been no time, until now, within the last twelve years, when the Tribune was not supposed to keep, for the benefit of the idle and incapable, a sort of Federal employment agency, established to get places under Government for those who were indisposed to work for their living. Any man who had evervoted the Republican ticket believed that it was the duty and the privilege of the editor of this paper to get him a place in the Custom House. Every rednosed politician who had cheated at the caucus and fought at the polis looked to the editor of the Tribune to secure his appointment as gauger, or as army chaplain, or as Minister to France. Every campaign orator came upon us after the battle was over for a recommendation as Secretary of the Treasury or the loan of half adollar. If one of our party had an interest pending at Washington,
the editor of the Tribune was telegraphed in frantic haste to come to the Capitol, save this bill, crush that one, promote one project or stop another. He was to be everybody's friend, with nothing to do but to take care of other folks'
business, sign papers, write letters, and ask favors for them, and to get no thanks for it either. Four-lifths of these people were sent for the other fifth.

The man with two wooden legs congratulated himself that he could never be troubled with cold feet. It is a source of profound satisfaction to us that office-seekers will keep aloof from a defeated candidate who has not influence enough at Washington or Albany to get a sweeper appointed under the Sergeant-at-Arms,
or a deputy-sub-assistant temporary clerk into the paste-pot section of the folding room. At last we shall be let alone to mind our own affairs
and manage our own newspaper without being

last we shall be let alone to mind our own affairs and manage our own newspaper without being called aside every hour to help lazy people whom we don't know, and to spend our strength in efforts that only benefit people who don't deserve assistance. At last we shall keep our office clear of blatherskites and political beggars, and go about our daily work with the satisfaction of knowing that not the most credulous of place hunters will suspect us of having any credit with the appointing powers. That is one of the results of Tuesday's election for which we own ourselves profoundly grateful.
